Pamplin Considers New Water System

A lengthy public hearing was held Friday night at Pamplin Elementary School to explain details of a proposed water system.

Representative Watkins M. Abbitt was among the speakers. Mayor Richard F. Williams, who presided, explained that six years ago the county Health Department told Pamplin that something had to be done about the public sewage system. Since that time, he said, an engineering survey has been made and that because of the cost involved it was decided by Pamplin City Council to pursue the possibility of an improved public water supply system, first.

Engineer Creed Elliott, representing the survey engineers, Hankins and Anderson of Richmond, displayed charts giving two different plans for furnishing water to a maximum of 176 connections. The cost, said Elliott, about three years ago was estimated at $266,000 and would now undoubtedly be higher.

Proposed plans call for one well, possibly two, furnishing 50 gallons of water per minute. An elevated tank, on one plan, would hold 75,000 gallons of water with one six inch main to connect to the other four inch mains serving households. This system, he said , would mean reserve water supplies for fire protection.

A sewerage system, serving only the corporate limits of Pamplin, he estimated at about $250,000.

Costs Going UP

Costs of a water or sewerage system are rising about 10% a year, said Elliott. He also said that Pamplin is working at a disadvantage because of having to build an entire system. He said, further, that it will be "almost impossible to construct these facilities without some sacrifice". He noted that the population has remained stationary for about 40 years, and that because of this the Farm and Home Administration realizes this puts a strain on the people and have come forward with offer of a grant to underwrite the expense. H. W. Hawks, Community Pgm. Specialist , representing the Farmers Home Administration was the next speaker. He complimented Creed Elliott on his plans and preparation. He said that $4.8 million is available for grants to municipalities in Va. out of a $100 million total for the entire USA.

Hawk's cost estimates for the proposed system parallel Elliott's estimates, Hawk suggested rates which he said would be low enough for the maximum number of people to be a part of the system: $5,000 for the first 2,000 gallons with a sliding scale for increased usage, $3.00 for each additional 1,000 gallons, etc. He estimates that the system would cost about $7,000 yearly to operate - water treatment , billing repairs, bookkeeping, postage, etc. In answer to a question from the audience he said that the necessary loans for the system could be secured by general interest bonds passed by referendum.
